s say whether or not you can make a contribution to the Sick Babies' Fund:

In Allen street, in a back basement of two rooms, I found a poor mother with seven small children. The youngest, one year old, has been lit three months; taker has had work only occasionally since Christmas. For nearly two months they have been begging food and clothing on the street and from neighbors in the house, who are very poor.
They have been told to leave the house sevcaral times, but the order was not enforced until te-day, when they were compelled to pack up their miverable assets.

When I reached the house the husband was out looking for a new shelter and the wife was alternately weeping bitterly and endeavoring to pacify the frightened children, whose grief hers provoked. I wrote a note to the United Hebrew Charitles and appealed to the neighbors in the front basement to make sure that the little children would be provided with supper, as the poor woman did not have an atom of food in the house. I learned on investigation that the woman I had appealed to for help had divided with the family every day for the last month, even the medicine preserthed for her own children. She not only promised to give her heighbors a share of her supper, but in case they were unable to obtoin other lodgings kindly offered to let them sleep in her home.

Manager R. D. Stevens of "Wang" says that the feminine members of his company are now so conspicuous on the road in dogcarts, phaetons and such like, that he will have to do something of the kind himself, to save his reputation. He suggests taking the "Wang" elephant out for an airing. It would be a novel spectacle, at any rate. By the by, he "perfesh" was extremely well represented on the road on sunday. There were Estelle Clayton and Isabelle Evesson, the comely sisters, in a brougham; there was Charles Frohman, Napoleonic and alone; there were bright, vivacious Nellie Llogard and onyxeyed Bijou Fernandez; there was Mrs. Lesile Carter, all by herself, and there was the energetic Teddy Marks, just returned from booming "Shenandoah." Manager B. D. Stevens of "Wang" says
